

CHAPTER 41

MEDICAL SCIENCES PSYCHIATRY

Doctoral Theses

323. GUPTA (Ravi)
Studies on Pathophysiology of Migraine and Tension Type Headache with Reference to Biochemical, Neurophysiological and Genetic Aspects.
Supervisors : Prof. M. S. Bhatia, Prof. B. D. Banerjee and Prof. S. S. Sircar
Th 16300

Abstract

The study confirm the episodic nature of the illness. These findings suggest that functional changes occurring during headache are either completely episodic or that they remain activated at such a subtle level, that they are not detectable with the help of available instruments and methods. Secondly, this study suggests that migraine and tension type headache may be genetically distinct disorder with pathophysiological overlapping.

Contents

1. Introduction. 2. Review of literature. 3. Methodology. 4. Discussion. 5. Summary and conclusions. 6. Strengths and limitations. Bibliography and annexure.